Hunton & Williams LLP Unveils New Mobile-Responsive Privacy and Information Security Law Blog

Hunton & Williams is pleased to announce the release of its newly designed and mobile-responsive Privacy and Information Security Law Blog, www.huntonprivacyblog.com.

“Our award-winning blog has served the entire privacy community — from companies and practitioners to international regulators,” said Lisa Sotto, who heads the firm’s global privacy and cybersecurity practice. “This new version of Hunton & Williams’ privacy blog offers our audience greater access to information in real time and more interactive features, which are critical in this fast-changing arena.”

Begun in January 2009, Hunton & Williams’ Privacy and Information Security Law Blog has become a go-to resource for news and analysis on privacy and cybersecurity issues. The blog features information and legal commentary on a range of topics in the news, breaking US federal and state privacy and data security legislation, recent court and regulatory decisions, international data protection law updates, and other news and analysis.

The blog is managed by Sotto, members of Hunton & Williams’ global privacy team and principals of the firm’s Centre for Information Policy Leadership, who are known throughout the world for their leadership in this field.

Hunton & Williams’ global privacy and cybersecurity practice helps companies manage data at every step of the information life cycle. The firm has been ranked as a top law firm for privacy and data security by Chambers and Partners and The Legal 500. Computerworld magazine recognized Hunton & Williams as the best global privacy advisor for the past four consecutive years. Hunton & Williams also was selected for one Fortune 100 client’s 2013 Law Firm Award for its privacy work, noting that the privacy team’s “laser focus on the issues resulted in a flawless execution.”
